DISSERTATIONS

Candidates are required to complete a dissertation on a subject to be chosen from those set by the Examining Board or, alternatively, one of the candidate's own choice which has been approved by the Board. A dissertation outline has to be submitted by 31 January and the dissertation submitted by 30 September.

By way of example and indication of the sort of subjects which are selected by the Board as suitable areas for dissertations, the set topics for the last five years are shown below.

2018 Programme

1. Given the advances in technology, discuss where these could be applied to the electoral processes, both as individual areas of work through to wholesale changes. Consider the steps that would have to be taken to implement any changes?
2. Electoral registration in the UK has long been based on the principle of maintaining complete and accurate registers but it could be argued that since IER was introduced, neither is being achieved. Discuss and make recommendations as to whether this basic principle remains realistic today by reference to examples of registration systems in use globally.
3. Is the media a threat or an opportunity? Explore this question in relation to the administration of elections from the perspective of voters, electoral administrators and candidates.
4. Is it time the House of Lords is abolished as a second "chamber" in Parliament? Consider the arguments from both sides and if abolition did not take place, what changes could be made to ensure that the will of elected representatives is not overridden by the Upper House.

2017 Programme

1. Compare and contrast the methods of challenging an election in a UK Parliamentary constituency with challenging elections in two other countries. What recommendations would you make for change in the UK.
2. Since 2006, the Electoral Commission has been permitted to set and monitor performance standards for Electoral Registration and Returning Officer. Consider how successful or not the performance standards regime has been for key stakeholders in the intervening period and suggest how, with the ever changing electoral landscape, the monitoring of standards of performance might best be achieved to improve the quality of service delivery.

3. Identify radical options to reduce the costs of delivering electoral services whilst ensuring that the roles of Electoral Registration Officer and Returning Officer are discharged in accordance with legislation. Draw on examples of good practice from the UK and abroad to illustrate how far the delivery of electoral services might evolve.

4. Despite a plethora of changes to electoral systems over the last 20 years, many people still appear to be disengaged from political processes. Given a blank sheet of paper, what electoral systems should be introduced that will provide access to the modern democratic process whilst ensuring that it can be trusted? Compare with two other countries which provide good examples of such development.

2016 Programme

1. In the multi-cultural and multi-national environment that exists in the UK, has the time come to extend the franchise to all residents and allow everyone the right to vote at every type of election?

2. How secure is our electoral system from fraud? Consider how the current UK system has developed in comparison with at least one other mature democracy and another more recent democracy. Suggest any changes to our electoral system that may make the processes more robust.

3. It could be said that online registration has encouraged participation in the democratic process. Examine further online or e-democracy initiatives that will engage the electorate to participate in democracy over the next 5-10 years.

4. With continued pressure on local authority spending, identify radical options to reduce the costs of delivering electoral services whilst ensuring that the roles of Electoral Registration Officer and Returning Officer are discharged in accordance with legislation. Draw on examples of good practice from the UK and abroad to illustrate how far the delivery of electoral services can evolve within the current legislative framework. Where there are significant barriers to such evolution, outline the changes you would advocate making and the advantages which would be gained.

2015 Programme

1. How can efficiency savings be made for the budget for UK Parliamentary General elections? Examine the processes that can be put in place to make such efficiencies.

2. Analyse the role, methods and effectiveness of consulting with the local electorate through Council Tax referendums, Neighbourhood Planning referendums and Parish Polls and suggest how these could be made fit for modern day society.

3. Since 2006, the Electoral Commission has been permitted to set and monitor performance standards for Electoral Registration and Returning Officers and to collect information on the costs of electoral services. Consider how successful or not the performance standards regime has been for key stakeholders in the intervening period and suggest how, with the ever changing electoral landscape, the monitoring of standards of performance might best be achieved to improve the quality of service delivery.

4. Consider whether the delivery of electoral services should continue to be delivered by local government or whether the time has come to investigate alternative delivery models. Draw on examples of good practice from the UK and abroad to illustrate how the delivery of electoral services can evolve.

2014 Programme

1. How can budget efficiency savings be made for UK Parliamentary elections? Examine the processes that can be put in place to make such efficiencies.

2. The Government has introduced legislation into Parliament to permit certain prisoners to enjoy voting rights. Consider the background to this matter, undertake a comparative study with at least three other countries, comment on the nature of the legislation and how it might work and recommend a way forward to satisfy the requirements of the European courts.

3. The Police and Crime Commissioner Elections and Mayoral Elections are the only elections at which the Returning Officer plays a role in the publication of Candidates' election addresses. Examine the law and experience at elections where this has been done and make recommendations as to whether this should be introduced at other elections.

4. Consider whether the delivery of electoral services should continue to be delivered from within the framework of local government or whether the time has come to investigate alternative delivery models.
